

How and why I'm building a tool to turn notion docs into books I can print.

The problem

In the last few months I have turned interviews and notes I took for years into books with the help of Notion, Reedsy and Blurb.

This is a great setup but it has one problem I'm playing around. Notion is great to create the book content. Reedsy is great to format a book quickly. But these two don't speak together. So once you have your book in Reedsy you can't use anymore all the power of Notion to mess edit texts.

The prototype

To fix this I'm creating a tiny tool that turns automatically a Notion page that contains a book into a fully formatted PDF I can import directly in Blurb to then have it there as a pocket book. A pocket book with a hardcover and that others can buy.

X Screenshots

To create this tool I've used Replit.

For now with it I can :

- import / sync a book from notion to PDF
- preview the book
- make quick layout changes with a few buttons

What next

Now I'm in the full prototype phase. The goal is to have this tool ready for the next book I'll create with an interview setup.

Let's see how that goes.